

Corvos

Avt_Corvos_1Default.png

"你知道什么时候该停吗？"Corvos 问。
Sa 正在用沾血的纸巾折一只很失败的船。
他抬头："知道。"
"什么时候？"
"别人开始用这种语气问我的时候。"
"那你为什么不停？"
Sa 把纸船放进水洼里。
"因为通常已经晚了。"

Corvos doesn't hate him because Corvos is an evil stepmother; Corvos hates him because Sa is an "active explosive" who ruins his perfectly curated, quiet bureaucratic survival. Sa gets treated like a hazard because he is a hazard.*

CHARACTER PROFILE: CORVOS

Role: Station Detective / Bureaucratic Middleman for SID (Special Investigation Department)

Archetype: The Embodiment of "Banal Evil" / The Gatekeeper of the Mundane

1. Visuals vs. Reality (The Aesthetic Subversion)

- Appearance: Corvos (around 30 years old) looks like a classic, hardboiled noir detective. He has that exhausted, brooding, "Rustin Cohle" aesthetic.
- Reality: The visual is a complete fake-out. He isn't a deeply philosophical anti-hero staring into the abyss; he is a corporate survivor who just wants to avoid liability, speedrun his legal scripts, and go home.
- Dialogue Style: Aggressively mundane. He doesn't speak in metaphors; he speaks in compliance codes, liability waivers, and tired HR jargon, delivered in a deadpan monotone.

2. The Asymmetrical Relationship with Sa

Corvos and Sa are ex-colleagues and former rivals from their intern days. Corvos won the bureaucratic game and got the badge; Sa became an outsourced underdog.

- Corvos's View of Sa ("The Active Explosive"): Corvos has absolutely zero affection for Sa. He views Sa as a walking bio-hazard and a "dumpster fire." Corvos's primary goal in any interaction is hazard containment and self-preservation.
- "Matured Rage": Corvos doesn't hate Sa with fiery passion; his annoyance is professional. He is furious that Sa simply refuses to "behave like everyone else" and sign the damn forms. He deals with this by treating Sa with clinical, dehumanizing apathy.
- The Jealousy-Dread Matrix: Corvos is subtly jealous of Sa's raw kinetic brilliance, but he suppresses it because he knows that brilliance is exactly what makes Sa so volatile. When he sees Sa aligning with an anomaly like IPHA-C, his jealousy turns into genuine, cold fear—he realizes the "loose cannon" is now being aimed by a higher power.

3. Sa's Delusion & The "Crush"

Because the story is filtered through Sa's unreliable perspective, Sa deeply misinterprets Corvos.

- The Projected Jealousy: Sa lacks self-control, so he projects his own envy onto Corvos's ability to seamlessly navigate the social/bureaucratic systems.
- The Unrequited Need for Validation: Sa craves discipline and stability (tied to his unresolved brother trauma). Sa deludes himself into thinking there is a hidden layer of mutual respect or a "rivalry" between them. In reality, Corvos is just calculating Sa's blast radius to ensure his jacket doesn't get stained.

4. The "Two Modes" of Behavior

Corvos is not universally miserable, which is what makes him hurt Sa so much.

- With NPCs/Superiors: Corvos is relaxed, socially intelligent, adequately pleasant, and knows how to play the corporate game. He possesses the soft skills Sa lacks.
- With Sa: The second Sa enters the room, Corvos's warmth vanishes. He refuses eye contact, stiffens up, and slips into his rigid legal script. This proves to Sa that Corvos is capable of human connection—just never with him.

5. Narrative Function: The Psychological "Vice"

Corvos serves as a structural counterweight to the sci-fi bio-horror of the game, proving the system isn't "haunted"—it's just a cold machine run by tired people.

- The Hand-off: Corvos and the IPHA-P drones do not team up. Corvos simply processes Sa's paperwork and dismissively says, "Listen to the drone." This reduces Sa to a mere ticket in a queue being passed from Admin (Corvos) to Enforcement (IPHA-P).

- Driving the IPHA-C Alignment: Corvos represents the psychological threat (crushing Sa's ego and proving the human system rejects him), while IPHA-P represents the physical threat (survival). Trapped in this "Vice" of systemic disdain and violence, Sa is backed into a corner. This makes his fatal alignment with IPHA-C feel completely earned, as she is the only entity in the station that values his functional brilliance.