

Note-Schedule

Based on the psychological blueprint we've established—his Se-dominant/Ti-auxiliary cognition, his transition from "Apex Predator" to "Ultimate Object," and his current maladaptive hyper-arousal—here is the analytical deduction of Sa's investigative tradecraft, split between his past and present.

Phase 1: 5 Years Ago — The Apex Cop (The "Fancy Rat" Era)

Before the explosion, Sa believed he was the architect of his own reality. He was arrogant, physically pristine, and possessed a lethal confidence. His investigative style was built entirely on Control and Consumption.

1. Work Schedule: The Binge-and-Crash Cycle

The Adrenaline Binge: He did not have a schedule; he had "hunts." When he caught a scent, his high dopamine threshold kicked in. He would work 72 hours straight, fueled by synthetic stims and pure ego, chasing the high of closing the net.

The Hedonistic Crash: Once the case was closed (or the dopamine wore off), he crashed hard. He spent his off-hours indulging his Se—drinking, fighting, gambling, or sleeping for two days straight. He treated his body like a leased supercar: drive it into the redline, then toss the keys.

2. Investigating Style: Kinetic & Transactional

Spatial Dominance (Se): He didn't investigate by reading files behind a desk. He investigated by physically entering a space and dominating it. He kicked down doors, cornered suspects in alleys, and read the micro-expressions of fear in a room. He used his physical superiority to shatter people's composure, making them make mistakes.

The Transactional Web (Ti): He built a massive, messy web of informants. He didn't do "good cop/bad cop"—he did "business." I ignore your low-level smuggling, you give me the Cult's drop coordinates. He thought he held everyone's leash.

The Fatal Blindspot (Ni-Blind): His greatest weakness was his inability to see the "long game." He treated the Cult like just another street gang he could manipulate. He calculated the immediate blast radius of the "oil" he poured, but he entirely failed to calculate the systemic, 5-year ripple effect.

Phase 2: Present — The Mad-Dog PI (The "Weaponized Ghost" Era)

The explosion, the scars, the class drop, and the constant surveillance of the 1-号 drone have fundamentally mutated him. He is no longer trying to control the Abyss City; he is navigating its ruins. His methodology has shifted from Control to Biological Attrition.

1. Work Schedule: Insomniac Loitering (Non-Euclidean Time)

Maladaptive Wakefulness: He no longer sleeps in cycles. Sleep is a vulnerability. He operates in a state of chronic, low-level exhaustion, taking 20-minute micro-naps in physically uncomfortable places (server rooms, rusted cars, or directly beneath Ipha-c's terminal).

The "Always-On" Bleed: Work and life are no longer separated. Because he uses the investigation as a substitute for emotional regulation, he never actually stops. He just changes gears from "violent" to "stalking."

2. Investigating Style: Kamikaze Reconnaissance

Using Himself as the Probe: He no longer sets traps; he is the bait. If he needs to know how heavily guarded a Cult cold-storage facility is, he doesn't use binoculars. He deliberately walks into their perimeter, gets caught, takes the beating, maps their response time, and then butchers his way out. He trades his own blood for high-resolution tactical data.

Algorithmic Evasion (The Drone Dance): Because the ESTJ drone (1-号) is constantly auditing him, his methods must be subliminal. He uses the city's environmental noise to hide his actions. He'll trigger a localized power grid failure just to cover the sound of a gunshot, or use a riot as cover to extract a target. He operates entirely in the drone's blind spots.

Social Scorched-Earth: The transactional web is gone. He has zero informants because he refuses to owe anyone, and he refuses to trust human frailty. He doesn't negotiate anymore. If he needs information from a middleman, he bypasses the conversation, breaks their fingers, takes their datapad, and leaves. It's hyper-efficient, utterly isolating, and completely devoid of "swagger."

Performing for the Void: Underneath the brutality, every major tactical move is subconsciously choreographed for Ipha-c. When he executes a flawless, lethal breach, he isn't doing it for the law, or the money. He is ensuring that when Ipha-c's algorithms process his kinetic output, the math is beautiful.

The Ultimate Difference: Intention vs. Inevitability

The cop from five years ago investigated to prove he was alive and in charge. He wanted the city to look at him and fear him.

The stray dog of today investigates to prove he is an inevitable force. He doesn't care if the city looks at him. He just wants to cut through the Cult's infrastructure like a ghost, leaving nothing but structural collapse behind him, all while bleeding out slowly under the quiet, aesthetic gaze of a bio-computer.

He went from being the hunter in the forest to being the forest fire itself—indiscriminate, self-consuming, and unstoppable until the fuel runs out.

message.txt

message.txt (6 KB)

6 KB